Description

Private international law (PIL) tries to answer the following four basic questions: (1) When may the courts of Kazakhstan hear a case and settle a dispute involving a private international law relationship, i.e. when (a) one of the parties to the dispute is a foreign party (e.g. an individual domiciled or resident abroad or a legal entity incorporated or established abroad), or (b) when some of the facts of the case took place abroad? (2) Which substantive law – domestic or foreign – should be applied by the courts of Kazakhstan to the settlement of disputes dealing with the abovementioned private international law relationships? (3) Which effects may be given in Kazakhstan to the court decisions issued by foreign courts, settling disputes involving private international law relationships? (4) Which solutions may be given to other issues arising out of cross border elements in private international law relationships and international litigations, such as notifications for foreign parties, finding, securing and examining evidence located abroad, cooperating with foreign judicial authorities, the presence of sovereign parties in the proceedings, etc? This course is very useful for all those students who wish to pursue a career in litigation, as well as for those students who wish to learn how to draft legal documents with a view to avoiding complex future disputes, especially when any of the parties is a foreign individual or a foreign corporation.
